People need to go to a hospital when they are seriously ill or when they had a bad accident. The doctors and nurses who work in hospitals are specially trained to look after sick people and make them better.

Sometimes people need operations, so most hospitals have operating theatres. These are the places where the surgeons perform the operations. They are assisted by nurses and sometimes by other surgeons.

The patient who is having the operation must have an anaesthetic. This makes him un-conscious throughout the operation.

The operating theatre must be kept sterile. This means that it must be kept very clean. All the people working there wear masks and special surgical gowns. They wear rubber gloves on their hands. They do this to prevent the spread of infection by bacteria.

In the days before medical scientists understood about how infections. This happened even when the operation itself had been performed successfully. And sometimes the surgeons theme-selves become ill if they had cut themselves during an operation.

After an operation the patient is taken to a bed in a ward, where he can be looked after until he is well enough to go to home. The nurses make sure that he is comfortable, and doctor visits him to check that the operation has been successful. People in hospital can also receive visits from their families.
